of Bachelor's Educational Programme 45.03.01 – Philology (specialization
"Foreign Philology")

The process of studying at the Programme “Foreign Philology” is aimed at preparing students to build up a professional career in various areas of professional activity, which require a high level of foreign language skills, the ability to create, analyze and edit texts of different styles. The focus is given to a deep and comprehensive study of two foreign languages of choice (English, Spanish, German, French) and the acquisition by students of fundamental knowledge in the field of philology and world literature. Senior students study such disciplines as “Methods of teaching foreign languages”, “Theory and practice of translation” and “Information technology in the humanitarian sphere”, which will allow graduates to decide on their future professional activity. During their studies, students have the opportunity to realize acquired skills in various types of practices: translational at enterprises and translation bureaus; linguistic cultural studies during excursions in a foreign language and language practice at cruise companies; pedagogical at educational institutions of various types.
